LOYOLA TEAM DEFEATED IN JUNIOR GAME

McNider and Plow Starred For McGill.

SCORE 3-2.

Both Teams Show Lack Of Training.

The junior hockey team opened its season last night at the Mount Royal Arena with a victory over Loyola Juniors. The final score of 3-2 does not indicate much closeness in the play, and the small group of spectators who watched the game were rather disappointed with the poor brand of hockey shown by both teams. The game was rather slow and uninteresting, and little outstanding work was in evidence.

The ice was in poor condition, and the surface was rough and uneven. Both teams showed lack of training, however, and combination was not used to any great extent. McNider was the only member of either team who really showed any speed. From time to time he made end to end rushes, and succeeded twice in getting past the goal-minder. Plow, who played a good game at centre, was on hand to receive passes, time and again, but failed to score, owing to the sterling work of Decary in goals for Loyola. McNider and Plow played good combination, and were the only players who did so satisfactorily.

For Loyola, Leamy, on the forward line, played a fairly good game, and Wickham also starred in the last period. Decary, in goals, put up an excellent exhibition, and kept the score down by stopping difficult shots on numerous occasions.

The game was free from rough play, and only six minor penalties were handed out by Jack Holland, who headed the game to the satisfaction of all.

A detailed account of the play follows:

Plow broke away right after the start, and Decary was called upon to stop several hard shots in succession in a scrimmage before the nets. The puck remained in centre ice for several minutes, and then travelled back and forth from end to end, without any side having the edge. McCullough made several good rushes, but always failed to pass the defence. Leamy secured from in front of his own goal, and made a spectacular rush, which the defence broke up, however. Five minutes after play had commenced, McNider carried the puck from end to end, and scored on a shot in the corner of the net. Leamy tied the score on another lone rush, a minute later. Johnson received a pass in centre ice, and, by some good stick handling, dribbled the puck past, through Decary's legs.

The play was all at the Loyola end for several minutes, and Decary had to stop some wicked shots. Plow was well into the play at all times during this period, and when he was penalized for a minor offence his work was missed on the forward line. Eager replaced Chisholm on the wing at this stage. McNider made another of his rushes, and, fooling the whole team, found the nets again with a hard shot.

Clement replaced McCullough, and Plow came on again in time to take part in some pretty combination which almost resulted in a score; with only Decary to pass, the referee called him back on an offside. The period ended with the play in centre ice.

Plow made a good rush down the ice, but his shot failed to fool Decary. Leamy tried hard to score, and showed considerable ability as a stick-handler, but he seldom got through the defence. He obtained little assistance from his wings, and his passes usually gave McGill possession of the puck. Plow and McNider worked hard to sag the nets again, but their shooting was not over accurate sometimes.

Eager went down the ice with Plow and passed in front of the net; the latter's shot was spoiled by a good check. Malone replaced McCullough. Plow again went to the bench for hooking, probably accidentally. In an attempt to score, the Loyola forwards resorted to shooting from long range, but Kersley attended to any shots that came his way. Decary saved a number of shots in succession. Chisholm gave Decary a hard shot, which came close to scoring. Malone was penalized. Plow and McNider indulged in some spectacular rushes which proved futile time after time. At this stage of the game the Loyola team was playing better hockey, the defence especially strengthening considerably. McNider checked a number of promising rushes,

THREE PRIZES ARE OFFERED FOR DRAWINGS

Unique Opportunity To Win $15.00.

SHORT TIME.

All Artists Can Help Themselves and Annual.

Various references have been made of late in the columns of the "Daily" to prizes which will be awarded for drawings published in the 1921 Annual.

This year, when so many more illustrations are needed, it seems advisable not to cling so closely to the old method by which the only prizes offered were the books themselves.

Three prizes of five dollars each are offered for the three best drawings submitted. No one is eligible to receive more than one prize. The judges, whose decision shall be final in all cases, will be the Art Editor of the Annual and two other persons to be chosen by him in conjunction with the Editor-in-Chief. In addition to these money prizes, Annuals will be given to all those who have three or more drawings accepted for publication, as has been customary in the past.

These conditions afford opportunities of enriching themselves both to the talented few and to their less fortunate brethren who are forced to rely on quantity rather than quality. Illustrations have not as yet been accepted for a variety of subjects, as will be seen by reference to the lists which have been posted on all notice boards. Drawings must, moreover, be handed in by Wednesday, the 15th of January. However, fuller particulars can be had from G. Dunnford, the Art Editor, who can usually be found in the Architectural draughting room, on the second floor of the Engineering Building—i.e., Room 61.

and saved Kersley a number of shots.

Stevens replaced Chisholm, and the forward line lost Plow for a few minutes again, when in Jack Holland's opinion he committed an offence. Immediately after this, Wickham batted the puck in from a scrimmage, making the score 3-2.

McNider made several good attempts but the Loyola defence was strong. Plow gave Decary a good shot on a pass from Johnston, but it failed to score. Loyola now took the offensive, and tried hard to tie the score. Leamy made some excellent rushes, and with support would surely have scored. In fact, Kersley had some hard work towards the close of play. Wickham also made some good plays and worried Kersley with his wicked shots. The game ended with the Loyola forwards still up at the McGill end, and doing their best to net the puck.

The line-up was as follows:

Loyola	McGill
Decary.....Goal	Kersley
Wickham.....Defence	McNider
McMahon.....Defence	Johnson

QUESTION OF LABOR BEFORE THE CAN. CLUB

Senator Robertson Delivered Address.

LARGE ATTENDANCE.

Legislation Recommended To Bring About Measure Of Conciliation.

Sympathy between Capital and Labor and a spirit of conference and mutual conciliation was the keynote of the address on "The Labor Situation in Canada," delivered by Senator Robertson, Federal Minister of Labor, to a large audience of the McGill Canadian Club at Strathcona Hall yesterday evening. Senator Robertson spoke with conviction and impressed everyone with his deep knowledge of the great question of the hour.

In introducing the speaker, C. H. Adair laid emphasis on the fact that Senator Robertson spoke not as an arm-chair theorist, but as a self-made man, who had known what it was to work all day and every day for a bare living wage.

An aspect of prime importance with regard to the present Labor situation, Senator Robertson declared, were, that as far as the question of unemployment and strikes were concerned the situation at the present time was immeasurably better than it was three years before the war. Statistics were brought forward in support of this statement, and it was further shown that there were more jobs in existence than there were men to fill them.

The war had a unifying effect on all classes of society, but during the year 1917 the steady rise of the cost of living, and the continuation of a pre-war scale of wages, brought about a natural condition of unrest among the workers.

It was about this time that the large floating foreign population of Canada began to replace workers, who had enlisted and gone overseas. These foreigners swarmed into the various Trades Unions; in many cases enticed by the vain promise of support on the return of the men overseas. When the returned men arrived, however, the employers were in a great majority of cases as good as their word, and not only received back their former employees, but even made room for a great number of others. Hence the discontent of the foreign-born workers.

Senator Robertson gave an account of the way in which some 300,000 returned soldiers as well as about 200,000 civilians, engaged in war-work, had been placed in positions by the efforts of such organizations as the Soldiers Civil Reestablishment Bureau, and by the loyal help of citizens patriotic associations.

It was explained why prices were still far above the normal level. Partly because Capital was somewhat nervous about undertaking anything on a large scale, and partly because such enormous amounts of material had been consumed by the war, from which no financial returns could ever be received.

The speaker felt that under the circumstances a few facts with regard to the Winnipeg strike might serve to show the culpability of its leaders, and that the aims of the Social Revolutionary Party in Canada were totally at variance with the aims and constitutional methods of the organized Labor Party.

In conclusion, Senator Robertson told of the great work which had been accomplished only recently by conferences between the representatives of Manufacturer's Associations. As a result of some of these conferences employers and employees had united in sending representatives to the government, presenting their unanimous views on the subject under discussion. Senator Robertson strongly recommended that Federal and Provincial Legislation should be enacted forbidding either a strike or a lock-out before the matter had been referred to an impartial committee for careful consideration. Special care should be taken by everyone to think for themselves, and not to be unduly influenced by the editorial expression of a powerful group of reactionary newspapers.

At the close of the address Senator Robertson was bombarded with questions by persons of all shades of opinion, and succeeded in answering these questions in a manner entirely satisfactory to the audience.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 8, 1920.

The Reorganization of the C.O.T.C.

In another column of this issue there appears the announcement that the C.O.T.C. will again take up its work at McGill. One has but to glance over the list of lectures which are to be given in order to be convinced that they will be welcomed by a large percentage of the student body, especially those of Science, and that they will prove of the greatest practical value even from the civilian's standpoint.

The men who have been chosen to deal with the various subjects making up the curriculum are men having a comprehensive knowledge of their subjects, and moreover, enjoy the reputation of being lecturers who take up the work from the most interesting and instructive standpoint. In addition these officers have in every case a brilliant war record to their credit and are naturally past masters in practical details, an asset invaluable to those who attempt to explain such subjects to others.

The course of lectures in aviation and wireless telegraphy should draw a large attendance from Science as these are subjects which are of general interest and importance to men having a basic knowledge of the principles involved, and are those with which any engineer either in peace or war must needs be familiar.

Of particular interest to students in Medicine will be the Medical services course. With such an array of physicians and surgeons, of reputation both at home and overseas, each lecture can not but attract a considerable number.

The O. T. C. before the war was largely attended both by students and Montrealers interested in the Militia. The officers in charge, both congenial and capable, were liked by the men, and the popularity of the course grew from year to year. When war broke out there was an enormous influx, and the O. T. C. equal to the situation widened its work, the results of which are so well known that we need not even refer to them here.

In several weeks its post-war classes will meet for the first time. Some of the old officers will again resume their duties, but many, bent by the tremendous strain of active war service, will be unable to resume the work which they so ably carried on.

To the many who have awaited its re-organization this news will be indeed welcome and with such an interesting field of work ahead a very large registration is assured.

Editorial Note

The attendance at the meeting of the Canadian Club was to say the least disappointing. Had non-members been excluded scarcely a hundred students could have been counted who were interested in this most timely topic. In addition one of the best authorities in the Dominion and a man who has risen by force of his own ability to a position of prime importance, was secured by the committee in the hope that a large number would come out. Something is wrong with the Undergraduate of McGill to-day. Is it carelessness or does he not feel a desire to profit by such opportunities?

Those who missed Senator Robertson's address last evening will perhaps never again this session be permitted to hear a subject treated in such a masterly fashion. The speaker, familiar with his subject in its smallest detail, placed the facts of the labor situation in such a manner as to render them intelligible to everyone present, and those who heard the speaker felt that they had indeed spent an evening worth while.

TIME-HONORED TRADE.

A special writer in New York City has been going about among the dealers in second-hand clothing, and tells a story in the New York Times which illuminates an industry that is, naturally enough, profiting by the high cost of living. One does not, it appears, refer to these garments as "seconds"; the proper term is "seconds," and the business goes far enough back, in point of time, to be an ancestral occupation in at least one of the New York families conducting it. "Four times a year," so one of the sellers of "seconds" is quoted,

INTERVIEWS WITH NOTABLES AT MCGILL

THE HONORABLE ALGERNON PERCIVAL FYFE-SMITH.

By Frank D. Genest.

Assigned by the Editor to get some real live news, and finding the usual sources in a more or less arid state, I betought me of an interview with the Honorable Algernon Percival Fyfe-Smith, who had recently arrived at McGill with the idea of taking a post-graduate course in our midst. The thought was father to the act. In less than a minute or so, I was knocking at the door of the Honorable Algernon's suite in the Ritz-Carlton Hotel. In response to my summons, I was confronted by no less a personage than Mr. Fyfe-Smith's valet, who would have made a fitting substitute for "Lo," the poor Indian, who earns his daily bread and Oleomargarine by standing in front of cigar stores.

The valet reluctantly admitted me after I had convinced him that I was neither a trades-person nor an insurance agent.

From the splashing sounds emanating from the vicinity of the bathroom, I surmised that the former Oxonian was indulging in his matinal tub. This surmise proved correct, for at a moment, the well-known and justly famous London Coddilion Leader appeared, garbed in a strikingly handsome pair of pale pink pyjamas, interspersed here and there with orange-colored polka dots, the whole being surmounted by the Fyfe-Smith family crest, a guinea pig rampant bearing the motto: "Chacun a son gout—Mobilier sequitur personam." The inevitable monocle graced his eye.

"Irose. The Honorable Mr. Fyfe-Smith," I said, rather inanely.

"Hello! Hello! Hello!" he exclaimed, "How much do I owe you?"

"Pardon me, Mr. Fyfe-Smith," I answered, somewhat nettled at his misconception of my visit, "I'm a Staff Writer on the McGill Daily, and—"

"A Pressman, eh?" he broke in, "how jolly, do you know, I entertained several Pressmen at the dear old governor's shooting box in Scotland, recently. No end fine chappies, what! Perhaps you know Arthur Billings, one of the Editors of the Times."

"The name sounds familiar," I replied, "but, no doubt, I am confusing him with my pal, Tommy Hamersley, owner of the Glasgow Bugle. But tell me, I went on, feeling that the interview was getting a bit out of hand, "what are your impressions of McGill?"

"Deuced fine coll., old dear," he exclaimed with marked enthusiasm. "I fancy I'll be as snug as the jolly little bug in the rug, heath-rippin' lot of profs—swanky old buildings and the odd flapper from the R.V.C. to tea with. Top hole I call it! Have a little nip of reusciator!"

"Thanks, old man," I returned, "I only drink Strathcona Hall Cocktails, that is to say, a glass of milk with a prune in it, but carry on yourself."

"Thanks awfully, old thing," he replied. "I find that it is necessary to guzzle the odd one in order to offset the rigours of your heastly climate—what!"

The famous Oxonian, having completed the act of guzzling to his satisfaction, I reopened the conversation by saying: "In view of the fact that you played considerable football in England, Mr. Fyfe-Smith, I am sure that the student body at McGill would like to have your opinion of its championship team. I presume you witnessed some

AIR MAILS IN PRACTICE.

A London despatch, says the Postmaster-General has made arrangements for the establishment of an air mail service between London and Paris. The service will extend to Paris, France generally, Italy, Spain and Switzerland. Registered and unregistered letters, postcards, packets of printed papers and commercial papers, and samples will be accepted for transmission. Parcels and insured correspondence will not be accepted. A special fee of 2s. 6d. per ounce will be charged in addition to the ordinary foreign postage and registration fee, where payable.

The correspondence will be conveyed to Paris by aeroplane, arriving in normal conditions in time for delivery in Paris in business hours the same day. Correspondence addressed to Paris will thus be accelerated by about sixteen hours. Correspondence for places beyond Paris will be forwarded by the next available train. Correspondence for places in France will be delivered by express on arrival at the office of destination; correspondence for countries beyond France will normally be accelerated by twenty-four hours.

In the inward direction, correspondence posted in Paris in the morning will normally reach London in time for delivery in Central London during business hours on the same day. It will be delivered immediately on arrival by express messenger without additional charge. Correspondence for provincial towns will be forwarded by the next despatch from London, and will usually gain twenty-four hours in delivery.

RESOLUTION OF SYMPATHY.

At a specially convoked meeting of the Law Undergraduates' Society yesterday, a resolution was passed, sympathizing with Professor Eugene Lafleur in his recent sad bereavement.

"Really, old chap," he protested, "I'm afraid you're havin' me on, if you know what I mean. Don't hesitate to give me a buzz when the spirit moves you. Old Algy is always up and ready for the odd jollification, what, what!"

With this hearty expression of good fellowship ringing in my ears, I took my leave of the distinguished Britisher, feeling that I had really accomplished something for my paper.

It was in 1871 that Denis' imagination and gratitude were kindled at the action of Bohemia, herself chained to Austria, who lifted her voice in protest against the seizure of Alsace and Lorraine. Denis went straight to Prague and became a student of Czech ideals. The value of his enthusiasm was seen when, at the beginning of the war, he started his "Revue Tchèque," in which he studiously supported the cause of Bohemia and discussed the problems of Central Europe with an acumen which compelled attention. Thus Bohemia reaped the reward of her generous initiative, many years before, in support of the rights of Denis' defeated country.

Sun Life Heads In City For Two-Day Conference

From the Atlantic to the Pacific Divisional managers of the Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada are meeting at the Head Office, Dominion Square. It is the annual conference of the managers of Newfoundland, United States and Canada and will last two days, ending to-night with a banquet at the Windsor.

Mr. James C. Tory, general manager of agencies, presided at the conference yesterday and Mr. T. B. Macaulay, president of the Sun Life, welcomed the representatives. He referred to the work the comrades of the Sun Life were doing in spreading the gospel of life insurance throughout the world and so preventing misery. He spoke of the wonderful record that had been achieved by the Sun Life during the year just closed when over one hundred millions of applied for life insurance had been secured by the company.

Among the managers present were: Messrs. H. O. Leach, British Columbia; W. H. Hill, Central Ontario; W. Lyle Reid, Eastern Ontario; Thos. J. Parkes, Eastern Townships; D. J. Scott, Manitoba; J. C. Stanton, Jr., Montreal; G. C. Jordan, New Brunswick; D. Johnston, Newfoundland; D. N. McLean, North Alberta; H. S. Potter, North Saskatchewan; Chas. K. Ives, Nova Scotia; L. A. There will be a wrestling practice in the Union at 5.15 p.m. to-day. All wrestlers are asked to be on the floor sharp on time.

ORCHESTRA.

There will be a rehearsal in the Union this evening at seven o'clock. This will probably be the last practice before the examinations. A full attendance is requested, as work must be commenced at once in preparation for a concert to be held in February. Arrangements have also to be made for having the club group photograph taken.

HOCKEY REFS.

There will be a meeting of the Class Representatives on the Hockey Club in the McGill Union at 5.15 p.m. to-day (Thursday, 8th).

BASKETBALL PRACTICE.

To-night at 6.00 p.m., the following men are asked to turn out:

Hay. Young. Little. L. Kern. Mnotgomery. Seath. Perrault. M. Kern. Levitt. Veitch. D. Foss. MacMean. Clarke. Crain.

PARLIAMENTARY NEWS.

Another step marks the progress of the Parliamentary movement in McGill. This afternoon at a quarter past five, the Progressives will meet to elect their officials and to formulate their political aims. If you are in favor of a fast, snappy, up-to-date mode of government, turn out to aid your side.

LIEUT-COLONEL ROBERT STARKE

When Sir Auckland Geddes was called to England in the autumn of 1914, he chose as his successor in the command of the McGill Contingent, C.O.T.C., Lieut-Col. Robert Starke, who was then in command of the 12th Brigade of the Active Militia.

Lieut-Col. Starke had had a long and successful military career, and was known as an officer of energy and ability. Enlisting in the 3rd Regiment, Victoria Rifles of Canada, as a private, he had passed through all ranks and risen to the command of that unit, bringing it to a state of efficiency never surpassed in its long history.

Coming to the McGill Contingent at a time when the initial work of organization had just started, he found an unbounded enthusiasm permeating all ranks, and he entered on his task wholeheartedly. During the autumn of 1914 and the early months of 1915 the energies of the military authorities at Ottawa were wholly directed towards the organization and equipment of the first and second C.E.F. Divisions, and although they were most sympathetically inclined towards the University Contingent there was little prospect of their being able to give it the backing—financial and in the matter of stores and equipment—which was essential to the success of the unit.

It was here that the wisdom of Sir Auckland's choice of a Commanding Officer became most apparent. With the experience gained in his long connection with the militia and his knowledge of the "ropes," Col. Starke was able to force upon the attention of those in power the possibilities of the University as a centre of military activity and to obtain their support in its development.

Few persons outside those actively engaged in its organization realize how critical were those early months in the life of the reorganized McGill Contingent, and how much of the success which ultimately came to it was due to the untiring energy and wise direction of its Commanding Officer, for with characteristic modesty he was ever ready to give to others the credit that was properly his own.

Of the part he played in the active work of the Contingent little need be said to a McGill audience. Winter and summer his commanding figure has been conspicuous on the campus, for he has been a most faithful attendant not only at Battalion parades and exercises but at the drills of even the smallest platoons and squads. Believing, as he did, that a Commanding Officer should work as hard as, or harder than, those whom he commands, he never spared himself, and, except when actually incapacitated by illness, has taken part in all of the training and field-work of the Battalion. Those who were most closely associated with him alone know at what sacrifice of personal interests this was oftentimes done, or how keenly he regretted his occasional enforced absences. His sense of duty to his unit and to his men has ever been high and has been an inspiration to all who have worked with him.

During the term of his command upwards of 5000 men have passed through the ranks of the Contingent and its two Auxiliary Battalions, and every man has carried away with him a warm admiration and respect for his Commanding Officer. Col. Starke's thoughtfulness for his men is proverbial, but only his executive officers realize what a watchful eye he ever kept for the wellbeing of the men in the ranks or how many well-meant plans of his were frustrated by the exigencies of the war.

Taken all in all, few men have done more for the common cause in the war than Lieut-Col. Robert Starke. To him McGill owes a debt of gratitude for the part he has played in her military activities during the past five years; not a draft or unit has gone from her campus but has been strengthened by his support; not a man has passed through the ranks of the Contingent, but has been influenced by his personality. It is fortunate indeed that in relinquishing command of the McGill Contingent, C.O.T.C., he will not sever his connection with the University, for as a Governor and a member of the Committee on Military Instruction his ripe experience and knowledge of military matters will continue to be at its service.

One engaging in the ardent present-day sport of seeking out the worst line in modern free verse should not overlook "Hesperia," which purports to be "An American National Poem." Take, for instance, the lines in the fourth section of this epic:

Though on a public mission, William needs
Must meet his own expenses. This he did
By teaching languages, Greek, Latin, Hebrew,
With French and Dutch.

It is hardly to be expected that a poet of Rhode Island can "meet his own expenses" by the writing of such lines of vers libre, any more than the multitudes of the eighteenth century could meet theirs by turning out banal couplets.

Some one might make an amusing article about queer placards found in hotels. Here are two to start with: An East Indian hotel is said to caution its guests, "Please do not slap the servants. Report any incivility to the manager"; and a sign in the rooms of a Western hotel reads, "Guests wishing to clean their shoes will kindly ask the housekeeper for brush and blacking. Please do not use the towels for this purpose."

thrustful juniors were nipped in the bud because "The Colonel" refused to risk the health of those under his command.

Realizing from the first the possibilities of the University as a recruiting ground for the overseas forces, Col. Starke was a most enthusiastic supporter of the various units and drafts which were sent from McGill. That his interest did not cease with the departure of the units overseas will be testified to by hundreds of men who directly or indirectly have benefited by his kindness, for he was ever ready to help both those who went over and those whom they had left behind.

As a feeder of overseas units, the activity of the McGill Contingent was not confined to the six Universities Overseas Companies and the other units directly affiliated with it, for there was hardly a unit raised in this military district which did not number amongst its officers or other ranks men who had received their initial training on the University Campus. Here, too, Col. Starke's broad-minded policy was apparent, for even at the time when voluntary recruiting was at low ebb, while he did everything in his power to encourage men to enlist, he steadfastly refused to use his influence in favor of any particular unit. He felt that the unit which a man selected was of secondary importance and a matter which a man himself should decide.

In the very early years of the last century, there was residing there, at No. 8, whether on the side on which Mr. Pickwick's bedroom window opened, or "over the way," is not related, a certain Catherine Roper, spinster, who kept a school, and to this school came, sometime about the year 1814, Master Benjamin Desraeli. This must have been at any rate thirteen years before that memorable May morning, to be exact the thirtieth of the month, on which "Mr. Samuel Pickwick burst like another sun from his slumbers, threw open his chamber window, and looked out upon the world beneath. Goswell Street was at his feet. Goswell Street was on his right hand—as far as the eye could reach, Goswell Street extended on his left; and the opposite side of Goswell Street was over the way."

Had the seraphic excelsman, one cannot help wondering, at the time Master Benjamin was climbing Miss Roper's steps, brought Mrs. Bardell to live in the street? The lady, of course, had not yet, in the pathetic language of Mr. Serjeant Buzfuz "furnished her first floor," nor "placed in her front parlor-window the written placard, bearing this inscription, 'Apartment furnished for a single gentleman.'" Therefore Mr. Pickwick had not yet come to Goswell Street, and it consequently follows that the future Prime Minister could not have passed unconsciously upon the pavement, the elderly chairman of the famous club.

What is far more curious is that as the days went by, as the fame of Miss Roper's pupil and Mrs. Bardell's lodger rose in the world, they did not come to know each other any better. The Earl of Beaconsfield remained apparently as unappreciative as Master Benjamin of the benevolent source of so much of the world's humor. Mr. Pickwick, it would seem, at no time became more than a name to the great statesman. "I wish," he wrote to Lady Londonderry, on September the sixteenth, 1857, "like you, I could console myself with reading novels, or even writing them; but I have lost all zeal for fiction, and have for many years."

ORGANIZATION OF BASEBALL IS COMPLETED

Two Teams Represent McGill In League.

EXECUTIVE ELECTED.

Two Teams Will Be Chosen This Friday.

Yesterday afternoon at 5.30 about twenty men turned up at the M. H. S. gym. for the first indoor baseball practice in connection with the picking of the teams for the Baseball League. A snappy practice was held, those who turned up showing possibilities which, when developed, ought to make a decided impression in McGill's favor in the League. McGill has entered two teams in the League: the "Red" and the "White," and from the showing of yesterday afternoon, and the enthusiasm displayed, these teams, when picked, ought to give a good account of themselves. The practice ended at 7.00, and a meeting of the players was held, at which the McGill Indoor Baseball Club was formed, a constitution drawn up and adopted.

The following officers were elected to constitute the executive:
Hon. President—"Dad" Lamb.
President—G. G. Anglip, Law '21.
Vice-President—Cockshutt, 1st Year Commerce.

The above executive will be elected annually at a spring meeting of the club called for the purpose.

The committee appointed to determine the personnel of the team were: Cockshutt, representing Arts and Commerce.

Hilary Robertson, representing Law. Thompson, representing Science. Henry, representing Medicine.

Cockshutt was elected chairman of the committee, and will call all necessary meetings before the next practice, Friday, 5.30, M. H. S. gym. All interested and desirous of winning a place on either team, turn out to this practice and show the rest where they are ahead of them. A final practice will be held on Monday, after which the two teams will be picked, and they in turn will elect their captains. The first League game featuring McGill stars will be on Wednesday, when the two McGill teams face each other. All out to the practice on Friday.

LONDON CELEBRITIES.

So Mr. Pickwick was not the only celebrity that ever came in and out of Goswell Street. No one, of course, likes the word celebrity, it is too nearly akin to royalty, and "such like," as Mrs. Gamp might say, not to cause a jar in the ear which is engaged in trying words, but still it has been used by the most respectable authors. To return, however, to Goswell Street and Mr. Pickwick, it begins, as has been said, to be apparent that that distinguished man was not the first celebrity connected with that honorable thoroughfare.

In the very early years of the last century, there was residing there, at No. 8, whether on the side on which Mr. Pickwick's bedroom window opened, or "over the way," is not related, a certain Catherine Roper, spinster, who kept a school, and to this school came, sometime about the year 1814, Master Benjamin Desraeli. This must have been at any rate thirteen years before that memorable May morning, to be exact the thirtieth of the month, on which "Mr. Samuel Pickwick burst like another sun from his slumbers, threw open his chamber window, and looked out upon the world beneath. Goswell Street was at his feet. Goswell Street was on his right hand—as far as the eye could reach, Goswell Street extended on his left; and the opposite side of Goswell Street was over the way."

Had the seraphic excelsman, one cannot help wondering, at the time Master Benjamin was climbing Miss Roper's steps, brought Mrs. Bardell to live in the street? The lady, of course, had not yet, in the pathetic language of Mr. Serjeant Buzfuz "furnished her first floor," nor "placed in her front parlor-window the written placard, bearing this inscription, 'Apartment furnished for a single gentleman.'" Therefore Mr. Pickwick had not yet come to Goswell Street, and it consequently follows that the future Prime Minister could not have passed unconsciously upon the pavement, the elderly chairman of the famous club.

What is far more curious is that as the days went by, as the fame of Miss Roper's pupil and Mrs. Bardell's lodger rose in the world, they did not come to know each other any better. The Earl of Beaconsfield remained apparently as unappreciative as Master Benjamin of the benevolent source of so much of the world's humor. Mr. Pickwick, it would seem, at no time became more than a name to the great statesman. "I wish," he wrote to Lady Londonderry, on September the sixteenth, 1857, "like you, I could console myself with reading novels, or even writing them; but I have lost all zeal for fiction, and have for many years."

Notes

LEADSLINGERS RIFLE CLUB.
There will be a business meeting of the Leadslingers Rifle Club in the Leathe Room at 12 noon to-day. All members are requested to be present as there is important business to be discussed. Among other matters the programme for the coming season will be drawn up. Changes in the membership regulations will also be discussed.

The Science students have all returned from the Christmas vacation, which was thoroughly enjoyed by all, and we are looking forward to welcoming the Teachers back in a few days.

WELCOME TO MACDONALD!

Tuesday was registration day for the students taking the Winter Short Course in Household Science. Fifteen candidates have so far been accepted; their names will appear in a later issue.

As well as the arrival of women students for the Household Science Course, there were accepted two new men in residence under the Soldiers Civil Re-establishment, and five new students in the Faculty of Agriculture. W. J. Reid, who is back in his 4th year; W. H. Barnett and E. Maisele, who have entered the 3rd year. I. M. Anderson, who took his first term in Guelph, and is finishing out his Freshman year with us and also J. Poulin.

We tender these new students a hearty welcome.

Although on second thought it is reasonable enough to suppose that some of the early settlers in New England brought folk songs with them, the discovery that some of these songs, handed down from generation to generation, are still being sung there may be surprising to the average New Englander. The isolated communities of the South have been the accepted happy hunting ground for collectors of folk song; the North has seemingly been no place to look for them. But the appearance, this autumn, of a volume of "Songs From the Hills of Vermont" adds to American folklore; and the preface introduces the reader to a Vermont village where a folk-singing farmer "of good old Vermont stock" perpetuates the ballads that were sung by his father and grandfather. The village is unnamed, which is probably just as well, or the folk-singers, James, Mary, and "Aunt Jenny," might find themselves embarrassed by the interest of summer visitors.

I have never read anything of Dickens except an extract in a newspaper, and therefore I cannot help to decide on the merits of "Little Dorrit." Evidently polite society was engaged in discussing the merits of the new book, which Blackwood's, with its usual amiability, had described as "twaddle"; and who so good an arbiter as the author of "Coningsby" and "Sybil."

SKATING OPENS AT MACDONALD

Rink Provides Healthful Exercise For Students During Evenings.

Monday night saw the opening of the College skating rink, on the Girl's Campus. Immediately after supper the students lost no time in getting out on the ice following the posting of a notice announcing skating. The rink which is under the management of Jack Pewtress "2" is rapidly nearing the finishing point. During the holidays the rink has been flooded and a good foundation laid. The skating last night would tend to smooth off some of the rough spots, and with one or two more coatings of ice the rink will have the desired surface.

The electric lights have not been put up yet, but that deficiency was taken care of by a full moon.

The 7.45 p.m. whistle all too soon announced the termination of the first evening, and the students are looking forward to many enjoyable evenings and a lot of good, healthful exercise during the remainder of the winter.

LIT. ARRANGE BIG MUSICAL

Apollo Glee Club To Give Concert At Mac. Next Week.

It is with great pleasure that we announce the coming musical event in store for Macdonald College—that of the Apollo Glee Club, of Montreal, headed by the celebrated Welsh tenor, Merlin Davies. This concert will be given in the Assembly Hall, Tuesday, January 13, under the auspices of the Macdonald College Literary Society, in aid of the local Red Cross.

In an interview with Mr. Buckland, president of the Literary Society, we are given to understand that considerable efforts have been put forth in order to arrange this concert; and that expenses will be considerable. It is estimated that these expenses will amount to $150. In order to meet these expenses and to allow for an extra fund, a silver collection will be taken. The management hopes that the students will respond readily.

The Apollo Glee Club consists of forty-four mixed voices, and offers a very fine variety, covering various phases—from popular songs to grand opera selections. Merlin Davies, who heads the company, is in a class by himself. Those who have followed the press will know of his success as a singer, not only in Canada but throughout the United States.

A detailed list of the evening's programme will be given out later.

CONTRASTS IN EDUCATION.

Sir Humphrey Davis thanked God "that he had been in a lazy school," and there is more in it than might appear on the surface. There are two great systems of education in vogue in the world to-day. We have one here in Canada, yes, in Toronto, which is modelled after the Scottish idea of a University. The Scotch idea is to make a man a great lawyer or a great engineer, to fill him full of knowledge; to knock brains into him while he pays for the assault and battery. But Oxford and Cambridge have other great systems. Here many men do no work so long as the University is in session. They busy themselves with the life of the place, its discussions, societies, raffles, athletics, and perhaps during the vacations they study seriously. In term, hard work is frowned upon, the life is the thing. And life is such a tangled business, that it involves of necessity and for its balance so much of contact with one's fellows that all kinds of qualities come to have their place. The training of the football ground in initiative and swiftness and above all in temper; experience of the working of a college society, where governments and committees are elected only then to be made the butt of those who have set them in their place—all these things are of first-class importance in any real education. Mere technical experience along one line is only a part of the matter. Truth and honor, team-play and good temper; a certain rapidity and decision and downrightness in the management of

SWINBURNE AS A PROSE WRITER

Swinburne was an exasperating prose writer. By the by, a friend has reprimanded me for saying that I yawned over his two volumes of "Letters" recently published. I yawned because I do not happen to be frantically interested in the Elizabethan dramatists, or in Algernon Charles Swinburne. Great men are usually self-centred. Swinburne was more self-centred than most great men. But he is amusing when he is angry. What do you think of this as a specimen of a great poet's prose and uncharitableness—"My sonnets on Carlyle's 'Reminiscences' have excited a most amusing and gratifying amount of wrath among the posthumous sycophants of that virulent old sophist."

The Evening News of London points out that new colors in the shops will not result from the arrival of German dyes in England as a part of the war indemnity. With British dyes, the only trouble is that the supply is not yet large enough. Discoveries have, it is stated, been made which the Germans said would take the English 20 years to make. The chemist, in this matter, has been quicker than the manufacturers, but an increased supply is shortly expected. This news will be welcomed, for there is a manifest reaction against wearing cheerless grays and blacks and the ubiquitous khaki of the last five years.

character, these all go to swell the count.

MCGILL TO HAVE C. O. T. C. AT BEGINNING OF TERM

Will Start Organization This Month — Courses For Commission Certificates — Special Courses In Addition To Infantry Work — Open To All Undergrads.

McGill Contingent C.O.T.C. will commence training during the last week in January on completion of the first term examinations. Qualifying Courses for Infantry Captains and Lieutenants' Certificates will be commenced and Undergraduates desiring to enroll as members of the C.O.T.C. may make application at the Adjutant's Office in the East Wing of the Arts Building.

In addition to the above Infantry Courses, arrangements have been made for Special Courses of Military Instruction, it being felt that the work of the Officers' Training Corps should develop along more scientific and specialized lines. The Special Courses for this year will take the form of Eight Lectures for each course, one lecture each week, and will be open to all Undergraduates whether members of the C.O.T.C. or not. They will be given with a view to imparting general information on the subjects selected, based on the experience gained in the War. These lectures should prove of great value and interest to all Undergraduates, particularly those who have served overseas, and who desire to maintain their interest in military affairs. Owing to the limited space and facilities, those electing to take any one or more of the Courses should forward their names to the Adjutant as soon as possible.

EIGHT LECTURES PER COURSE.—ONE PER WEEK.

MODERN ENGLISH NOVEL BIG HIT AT PRIVATE SHOWING.

An entirely different style of play to that given Tuesday was screened before a well-pleased audience at another private showing of British films at the Strand by the Anglo-Canadian Picture Plays, Ltd., yesterday morning. It was one of the Hepworth Picture Plays films, a dramatization of one of Edith Wharton's popular English novels, "The Forest on the Hill," with Alma Taylor as the star. The story pictures English country life and characters, set in fine old English villages, woods and moors. The central theme is the killing of a tyrannical squire, for which an innocent man is tried and condemned for murder. The real slayer saves him by writing a confession and then shooting himself. The play is full of human interest, with touches of quaint humor, and is admirably acted. It will be among the early releases to the public in February, by the distributors, The Import Film Company, Limited.

ALUMNI DECIDES TO HAVE PAPER

Publication Now Out Is Filling Much-Felt Want.

With the re-organization of the Graduate Society, an old dream comes true. This is manifested in the appearance of the "McGill News." This paper is published quarterly, and deals with the events of the Society and the University at large. That it will prove invaluable to graduates and undergraduates is but a matter of a day or two. To-morrow or Friday, the "McGill News" may be had from the janitors at thirty cents per copy. No less a distinguished personage than Dr. Leacock controls its editorials.

ENGLAND'S MOVIE THEATRES HAVE HOME MADE FILMS

"British Films Are Coming Into Their Own There," Says London Visitor

"There is one thing which I would like to have you say and that is this—British films are now coming into their own. Our cinemas are showing pictures made by British firms in England and we are very pleased that such is the case," said Mr. Hadden Swaffer, late editor of the Weekly Despatch and now editor-in-chief of the Cross-Atlantic Newspaper Service, who is visiting Canada and the United States. In response to a question with regard to labor conditions in England, Mr. Swaffer said: "It is necessary to clearly define the difference between labor unrest in Great Britain and in the United States. In the latter country the labor agitation is largely led by radicals of foreign birth who cannot be expected to have the same interest in their adopted country as they would have if they had been born in the country." "In Great Britain our strikes and labor troubles are largely, almost entirely as a matter of fact, directed by native leaders who are more reasonable than they would be if they did not have a personal stake in the country. Labor troubles in England," continued Mr. Swaffer, "are for the most part on the surface, they don't strike deeply because it may be said truly that all sides are united on one point and that is the welfare of the country. Both sides have a stake, so to speak, in the country whereas so far as I am able to learn this is not altogether the case in the United States." Referring again to the matter of films Mr. Swaffer said that the belief that the climate of England was totally unfavorable to the production of films was now an exploded theory. I have it on the word of no less an authority than D. W. Griffiths that pictures can be made in England as well as they can be produced anywhere else during certain months of the year. To meet the demand this means intensified production during these months but it is absurd to say that Britain cannot supply this demand herself.

Accompanying Mr. Swaffer is Mr. Alfred A. Wolmark, one of England's greatest artists and the leader of a new school of art which has for its chief objective a better appreciation of color. Mr. Wolmark has been hailed the Color King and his works display a fine understanding of color. His career has been an interesting one. Starting life as a conventional painter his work soon attracted widespread attention. They were strongly suggestive of the Rembrandt School and he was hailed by the critics as the second Rembrandt so closely did his work resemble that of the great master. Suddenly, however, Mr. Wolmark became convinced that he was a mere copyist, that his work contained little of originality, although it was meeting with a wide sale and the continued favorable comment of the critics, and then he adopted a new style which was regarded as so revolutionary that galleries closed their doors to him and he was dubbed the "mad painter." He persevered, he painted ceaselessly, many of his older paintings considered among his best by the critics disappeared. Over their surface was spread his newer conception of what a picture should represent slowly he came to be recognized as an artist with a new vision, less harsh remarks were made about his work and once again the public has begun to buy his pictures. "Those who came to scoff have remained to pray," Mr. Wolmark is arranging to hold an exhibition in the Art Gallery toward the end of this month when the Montreal public will have an opportunity to view some of his best pictures.

"the problem of the strike is not to be solved in its deeper significance until we know much more about coal than we know now, and thus especially as to the manner in which it is taken from its bed and brought to our cellars." "At best one-fifth of all our coal is wasted," says the secretary; and when one thinks of this waste as one-fifth of that Great Wall of coal, it becomes something to make a nation feel ashamed for its wastefulness.

D'Annunzio's manner of life since his Flume coup de tete is not at all approved of by the admirers and followers of d'Annunzio the poet. He has thrown literature to the winds, and the supplications of his friends, and of his publishers have no effect in inducing him to give even a modicum of his time to the belles-lettres. Never again will he touch a pen unless for some patriotic motive, so he says. Art for country's sake is all the art d'Annunzio intends to countenance in the future, as far as he himself is concerned.

It is reported that the Labor Mayor Elected of a London borough, Mr. G. Lansbury, has refused to wear the cocked hat and official robes. He will not, however, discard his chain, since this insignia serves the same utilitarian purpose as the identification disc. This decision to break with a time-honored precedent is apparently due to a consensus of opinion among Labor councillors rather than to any strong prejudice on the part of Mr. Lansbury himself. The idea underlying this objection to gorgeous medieval garments is that the mayoral office stands for public service, not for the aggrandizement of personality. Whether the citizens of the borough in question will applaud this departure remains to be seen. The dress is undeniably an anachronism.

Commenting upon the coal situation in the United States, in his annual report, the Secretary of the Department of the Interior, Mr. Lane, illustrates the amount of coal used last year by building an imaginary wall of coal "as huge as the Great Wall of China" entirely around the continental United States; and the latent power of the coal, he adds, would be sufficient to lift the wall 200 feet in the air. One may believe that the Great Wall of coal is a reasonably accurate illustration; as one may believe also that
